

■ TRENDS SHAPING THE FURNITURE INDUSTRY IN 2025

With the new year comes refreshed expectations across the furniture industry. In 2025, consumers are looking for more responsibly made, higher-quality, customizable furniture, and they want cheaper furniture to match their waning purchasing power.

Despite macroeconomic factors, technology-driven production will help reduce costs, allow for increased growth and empower agile competition to thrive in the market.

In 2025, technology and innovation are pivotal in revitalizing sales, with modular and affordable solutions. Mass production is gradually being replaced by flexible technology. Brands will need to diversify their supply chains because of geopolitical tensions and emerging markets.

Geopolitical tensions, protectionism and rising logistics costs are driving companies to reshape supply chains through strategies like friend-shoring and near-shoring. Consumer choice will revolve around sustainability.

In 2025, tightening environmental regulations will push the furniture industry to adopt more sustainable production practices. As eco-conscious consumers demand greater accountability, brands that seamlessly integrate sustainability into their marketing strategies will gain a competitive edge.

Sustainability is a central pillar of economic strategy. While cost-of-living and inflation continue to play into consumers' purchasing power and decision-making process, these same shoppers are willing to spend an average of 9.7% more on sustainably produced or sourced goods.

By embracing the synergy of "Econogy" the furniture industry can navigate the paradox of meeting ecological demands while maintaining robust business models, creating value for both customers and companies.
